A National Historic Landmark and a UNESCO Site of Memory for the Routes of Enslaved Peoples, Historic Sotterley is one of the oldest museums of its kind in the United States, with a history dating back to the turn of the 18th Century.

Through the preservation of the site’s historic structures and natural environment and the use of powerful stories to educate and bring American history to life, the organization strives to foster a better understanding of our world today by providing a living link to America’s complex history. Through partnership programs like Growing for Good and an array of diverse events, Historic Sotterley also aims to be a thriving community resource for Southern Maryland.
A 501(c)3 non-profit, Historic Sotterley is one of the only remaining tidewater plantations open to the public and covers 300 years of complex American history. As a former plantation, Historic Sotterley has the difficult but rewarding task of telling an inclusive story to help visitors better understand the past and find common ground as they learn and grow with us. We take that common ground a step further by helping to connect Descendants of all aspects of Sotterley's history and working with them to educate the public.

With 94 acres of stunning landscape and active farm fields, Historic Sotterley is more than just a museum. We help educate students through hands-on field trip opportunities and MSDE-accredited science, technology, engineering, arts, and math (STEAM) programming offered on site. We use our farmland to feed our community through our Growing for Good program, which mobilizes volunteers to help grow, harvest, and distribute fresh produce to local food banks and pantries. We bring our community together through a calendar of events ensuring there is something for everyone. All of these initiatives help us give back to our community and build a better tomorrow.
